

Linda Hayslett of L.H.Designs created an inviting green kitchen with lots of storage for a family of four in Redondo Beach, Calif.

PHOTO BY LAUREN TAYLOR

Lulu and Georgia Delilah vase in white, luluandgeorgia.com

Silestone Earthic Raw in Raw A, cosentino.com

Benjamin Moore paint in Bonsai, benjaminmoore.com

Crate & Barrel Elara black circular metal pendant light, crateandbarrel.com

Rejuvenation Vernon offset drawer pull in aged brass, rejuvenation.com

Zia Tile 12-by-24-inch bush hammered limestone tile in Buff, ziatile.com

Bedrosians 360 3/4-inch Penny Round matte mosaic tile in Shale, bedrosians.com

Alexa Hampton Kelan small pendant, visualcomfort.com

Going Green

Although her clients initially wanted a blue kitchen, Linda Hayslett of L.H.Designs (lhdesigned.com) convinced them to go in a more verdant direction. “I suggested a shade from Benjamin Moore called Bonsai,” she says. “It’s a soothing color that makes a statement, standing out in a mature yet playful way. It strikes the perfect balance—sophisticated enough for adults, but not so formal that tweens would feel out of place.” For balance, Hayslett used warm wood tones, plush tans, soft grays and brass accents. “These complementary colors create a cozy atmosphere, making the green feel like it’s enveloping you. With Bonsai as the dominant color, the other hues add depth and allow it to truly shine as the star of the room.”

PHOTOS COURTESY OF BRANDS